Moreover, the report states that it will help them provide a secure work ecosystem in which the influx of work opportunities is stable. The government-launched free vaccination plant is likely to create a positive impact on the labor market and the economy as a whole as most respondents believed it would help them provide a safe work ecosystem to their employees with permanent job opportunities, according to the report. Over 87 percent of respondents believe that free vaccination could prevent another reverse migration of these workers because they will also be entitled to the vaccine, according to a report by human resources solution vendor Genius Consultants.
