As the world has entered the phase of resuming economic activities across all sectors 75 per cent of professionals think that the transition has been seamless from a work from home model to a physical office after so many months.

The survey titled 'Work-Life Balance Dynamics' by Genius Consultants, further highlights that 75 per cent of participants acknowledged the fact that women have achieved a 'balanced comfort zone' during the lockdown phase, with others giving opposite views. A large share of 88 per cent believed that kids would find it difficult to adjust due to the resumption of regular office by their parents and would miss the quality time spent together during lockdown phases.
