When the country went under lockdown in March last year, work from home became the norm for most employees. However, the transition has not been easy for many. For those working from home, long work hours, constant fear of being laid off, salary cuts, and taking up additional responsibilities like managing kids, have taken anxiety and stress to entirely new levels. And for those joining a new job remotely, adjusting to the new work culture and getting to know new colleagues remotely has been a challenge.
