Most employees say that this provision should continue after the situation normalizes, as pandemic restrictions have forced most organizations in different industries to shift staff operations remotely. Said. In addition, research has shown that the hybrid model is cohesive and allows employers to continue working in a viable environment.

According to the survey, "it saves time and money that may have been spent on commuting and also helps businesses save office space."

The survey targeted more than 1,000 respondents in October across sectors such as banking and finance, construction and engineering, education / education / training, FMCG, hospitality, HR solutions, IT, ITS and BPO, logistics and manufacturing. It was done online.

In addition, according to a survey, more than 71% of employees believed that the hybrid model would have a positive impact on employee productivity and help them be more witty.

Employees said they felt they could produce effective results and reach their optimal capabilities without hassle, even in a virtual and exciting environment.

"As restrictions continue to be relaxed, the most important question is whether hybrid models will become a viable option for the industry. Many organizations in different sectors will continue to work with hybrid systems. Some have ruled it out, others continue to ponder it. Industry-wide sentiment varies with respect to its applicability and impact on employee productivity. It remains suspicious, "added Genius Consultants CMD RP Yadav.
